

---

Contents

---

Acknowledgements

xi

1 Introduction

1.1 A new paradigm 3

1.2 The possibility of justice 4

1.3 The absence of human rights 6

1.4 Forging human rights 10

1.4.1 Human rights forgery in police training 12

1.4.2 Human rights forgery in the encounter between police and people 12

1.5 Order of chapters 14

2 Remembering the police

19

2.1 The police memorial 19

2.2 Partisan policing 21

2.2.1 The beginnings 21

2.2.2 Lines of partisanship: Boer or Brit, capital or (white) labour 22

2.2.3 Apartheid policing: dim beginnings – forceful manifestations 23

2.2.4 Escalation of security issues – military policing 25

2.2.5 Continued meaning of the memorial 27

2.3 The racial narrative 30

2.3.1 Hidden traces 30

2.3.2 Segregation and apartheid within the police 31

2.3.3 Betrayal, survival, aspiration – recruitment of black police officers 33

2.3.4 Shortage of white recruits – the need for black recruits 33

2.3.5	Apartheid policing – separate policing	35
2.3.6	Crime control and its lack	36
2.3.7	Use of violence	36
2.4	The self-referential narrative of the police	38
2.4.1	Continuous modernisation	38
2.4.2	The rule of law	40
2.4.3	On their own initiative	41
2.4.4	Unifying cop culture	42
2.4.5	Not responsible	42
2.5	Making the cut, or just another myth? The human rights version of police history	43
2.6	Conclusion	46
2.6.1	Moving on: the everyday	47
3	From Geneva to Johannesburg: human rights training	52
3.1	The training gets cancelled	52
3.2	Part one: the Human Rights and Policing training programme	55
3.2.1	Setting the scene	55
3.2.2	The birth of the programme	57
3.2.3	The human rights industry – international as local	59
3.2.4	International human rights parochialisms	64
3.2.4.1	In pursuit of moral neutrality: don't alienate the trainee	65
3.2.4.2	Dispassionate police practice	67
3.2.4.3	Empty human dignity	68
3.2.4.4	Turning violence into force	68
3.2.4.5	Professionalism	69
3.2.4.6	Self-discipline	69
3.2.4.7	Vulnerable actors	69
3.2.5	Concluding comments part one	70
3.3	Part two: the Human Rights and Policing programme at management level	71
3.3.1	Evaluation	71
3.3.2	Reduced but ceremonial status	72
3.3.3	Human rights as a public relations feature	74
3.3.4	The broadening of a self-referential consensus	75
3.3.5	A clash of cultures? – or 'who is the odd one out'?	78
3.3.5.1	Institutional politics	79
3.3.5.2	Incompatibility of social and cultural aspects	81
3.4	Part three: the training level	82
3.4.1	Selection and training of trainers	83
3.4.2	The training: an exercise in translation	85

3.4.3 A new (moral) language	90
3.5 Conclusion	94
4 'Don't push this Constitution down my throat ... ': the use of violence in everyday policing	99
4.1 To use or not to use violence	99
4.2 The prevalence of violence	101
4.2.1 Nostalgia	104
4.2.2 Backstage–front stage: the meaning of violence	107
4.2.2.1 Nightly performance: out for arrest – scene one	107
4.2.2.2 Nightly performance: out for arrest – scene two	109
4.2.2.3 Administrative short cuts: acting without a warrant	111
4.2.2.4 Docket culture	113
4.2.2.5 Protection of 'time-out'	115
4.2.3 The dis/comfort zone	116
4.2.4 The 'wise guy'	117
4.3 Different lives – different actors	118
4.3.1 Inspector de Villiers	118
4.3.2 Sergeant Khoza	120
4.3.3 Inspector Chetty	121
4.3.4 Sergeant Legodi	122
4.3.5 Inspector Kekana	123
4.4 Conclusion	125
5 'Your police – my police': the informal privatisation of policing	128
5.1 Down Bree Street with the police	128
5.2 The inner-city imaginary	130
5.2.1 Johannesburg's inner city: dreams and dangers	131
5.2.2 Whose space is it? Housing in the inner city	132
5.2.3 Redirecting state power	134
5.2.4 Inner-city police intervention	136
5.3 Disjuncture and concurrence: making sense of the incoherence of the police intervention	139
5.3.1 Distortion or interpretation	139
5.3.2 Sergeant Klopper's sense of mission	140
5.3.3 Non-intervention as intervention	143
5.3.4 Corrupt relationships	143
5.4 Conclusion	145

6	'Ons gaan ry!': on entanglement and human rights as violence	150
6.1	Up and down in town	150
6.2	Porous boundaries and entanglement in the inner city	152
6.2.1	The real meaning of cars	152
6.2.2	Nurturing the contacts	153
6.2.3	Working with informers	156
6.2.4	Social neediness	157
6.3	Enacting human rights	159
6.3.1	In the margins – police abuse as norm	163
6.3.2	Pursuing exchange and making friends	164
6.3.2.1	The meaning of a cellphone number	165
6.3.3	Conjuring up human rights	166
6.3.4	Middle-class aspirations – what it takes to be a good police officer	168
6.3.5	Being drawn back into informality	169
6.4	Human rights as counterfeit rights	171
6.5	The violence of human rights	172
6.6	Conclusion	173
7	Conclusion: human rights in their ordinary state	178
	Bibliography	184
	Index	193

สำหรับเพื่อการศึกษาและใช้เพื่อเท่านั้น
For educational use and reference only