

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	i
Introduction	ii
Part I. What documentation means	1
■ Overview of human rights documentation	1
■ Clarification of some general concepts	5
Part II. What you need to consider	7
■ Importance of a clear mandate	7
■ Factors to consider in the set-up of a documentation system	7
Part III. What tools are there to help you	11
■ Basics of information handling and documentation	11
■ Basics of databasing	15
■ Creating databases	19
■ Standardising data entry	23
■ Tools and techniques for information retrieval	29
■ Principles and procedures in information retrieval	34
■ Evaluating the effectiveness of a storage and retrieval system	39
■ The glossary as a tool	41
Part IV. Designing your system (or systematising what you have)	43
■ Collecting information	43
■ Arriving at findings	47
■ Putting your findings down	49
■ Putting together a storage and retrieval system	55
■ Using information	59
■ Dealing with additional information	64
Part V. Conclusion	66
■ A look at the human rights information worker	66
■ A parting advice	67
Bibliography	68
Appendices	69
A. HURIDOCs standard formats	69
B. TFDP documentation forms and some instructions in their use	71
C. FIND documentation form	83
D. Burma Issues documentation forms	84
E. Some prescribed forms for monitoring violations of trade union rights	87